Combat the Summer Slide

So, what can parents do to prevent the “summer slide”?

- * Encourage your child to read 20 minutes every day. Public libraries are great resources for summer reading lists by age/grade level, and they often offer reading programs.
- * Read to your child to build listening skills, engage the imagination, and increase vocabulary.
- * Unplug from technology and give your child time to read and escape the heat of the day.
- * Keep books in the car for your child. Listen to audiobooks on long trips.
- * Encourage math skills by creating number books of things you collect or do during the summer.
- * Practice estimation skills by guessing how far and how long a road trip will be.
- * Provide math workbooks with activities to complete on road trips or during quiet times.
- * Encourage your child to keep a reading log and calculate the minutes read each week.
- * Cook with your child. Have your child follow simple recipes to learn fractions and practice measurement skills.
- * Encourage your child to practice writing skills by writing letters to relatives, sending postcards from camp, keeping a summer journal, writing a book, or authoring an online blog.
